

G. K. Chesterton

Robert Browning

By G. K. Chesterton (1874-1936)

There is an old anecdote, probably apocryphal, which describes how a feminine admirer wrote to Browning asking him for the meaning of one of his darker poems, and received the following reply: "When that poem was written, two people knew what it meant—God and Robert Browning. And now God only knows what it means. (Summary by Gilbert Keith Chesterton)
